Ruby's Big Idea

The school library had a problem. Many of the books were old and falling apart, and some had pages missing. Ms Okafor, the librarian, sighed as she held up a book with no cover. "We need new books," she said, "but we don't have enough money."

Ruby thought about it all the way home. Then she looked at the lemon tree in her garden. Its branches were so heavy with fruit that they nearly touched the ground.

"Mum," she said, "can I make lemonade and sell it to raise money for the library?"

On Saturday, Ruby and her mum squeezed twenty lemons. They mixed the juice with water and a little sugar. Ruby painted a sign that said "Lemonade for Library Books".

At first, nobody stopped. Ruby's shoulders drooped. Then her neighbour, Mr Chen, bought two cups and told everyone at the park. Soon there was a long line of people waiting.

By the end of the day, the jug was empty and the money tin was full. On Monday, Ruby gave the tin to Ms Okafor. The librarian smiled so widely that Ruby thought her face might crack.
