The Old Tree

In spring, the old tree wakes from sleep,
With tiny buds that start to peep.
The birds come back to build a nest
Up high, where baby birds can rest.

In summer, it is green and wide,
A shady place where children hide.
Its leaves go whispering in the breeze,
A secret song for bugs and bees.

In fall, leaves turn red and gold.
They tumble down when nights get cold.
We crunch them, kick them, jump and run,
And toss them high. It's so much fun!

In winter, every branch is bare.
It stretches, shivering, in the air.
But deep inside, the tree's asleep,
And dreams of buds that start to peep.
